Member of Parliament's online streaming interactive radio station - Taking Parliament to the People

Honourable Ganief Hendricks, Member of Parliament is moving a step ahead to ensure that South Africans are regularly updated with Parliamentary debates. He is in the process of launching an online streaming interactive radio station, "Taking Parliament to the People."

Hendricks, who has the full support of his party Al Jama-ah, says the online radio will have its own new approach on how to disseminate the various dialogues taking place inside Parliament to the people. He says the National Constituency Offices as far as in Tshwane, the remote Mpame rural fishing village in the Eastern Cape, Mitchells Plain and Gqeberha (formerly Port Elizabeth) have all expressed the need for an online streaming interactive radio station to change the way parliamentary constituency work is carried out in South Africa.

There are several debates in parliament and many important matters affecting the day to day lives of people are decided on in parliament. The online radio will encourage people to raise any issues that affect them, from daily service delivery issues to legislation of matters.

Hendricks says he is confident the online interactive radio will create awareness on how parliament values the voices, views and opinions of the people.
